“ Our condolences to Rosalyn's family. Rosalyn was a bright, cheerful person who livened up any family gathering. As Sylvia Heye's brother, I became acquainted with Rosalyn while helping out on the Heye farm (especially when Vernie was in the army), and later at family get-togethers.

Here's a tidbit about Rosalyn that not many people are likely to know. I ran across it while writing a book about Havana during World War II. Rosalyn contributed a "memory" of her World War II experiences, in Marjorie Rich Bordner's book about camp Ellis, "From Cornfields to Marching Feet." Her story about life in 1943 appears on page 189 of Bordner's book. Her cheerful, pleasant personality shines through this memory.

“ when I first met Rose was just before they got married, she treated me with kindness and respect and affection, I liked her. Not long after they came over to my house for a visit. I took them all over Northern Cal. my fondest memory of Rose is from that trip.. We were in San Francisco and I took them to lunch at the Cliff House at Lands End right on the ocean, Rose was sitting there with a big smile, and said she thought she'd never see the Pacific Ocean and here she was. After lunch we went down to the beach, I said take your shoes off and walk in it. she giggled, like a little school girl and did. she then turned around said to Dad come on George live a little. then the night before they left I was doing her hair for the trip, and we were talking and thanked her for marrying my Dad, then she said I don't want to be a stepmother, I laughed and said that's good cause I don't want a . We got along just fine. She had a good life and now she can rest.

I will miss you Rose
